Reading and writing systems are different across cultures. People from Western cultures read and write from left to right, while those from some Middle Eastern cultures read and write from right to left. People from some Eastern cultures, like that of Japan, read and write from top to bottom. Some global websites take these differences into consideration and adjust their websites for people in different regions. In countries where text is read from right to left, the website's search button is on the left and the logo is on the right. If you visit the same websites in a different language setting, you will see a different format.
